"We have a market that's been fueled by the central banks' intervention for the last decade. Eventually the world is going to have to face some issues—issues that more debt and printed money won't fix."

Zach Abraham has been in the financial services industry for more than a decade. He began his career at Russell Investments working with the retirement distribution team. He went on to get his Series 7 and 66 while working for Wells Fargo as a Financial Advisor. Before starting Bulwark, Mr. Abraham served as Chief Investment Officer for Abraham & Co., Inc. – a boutique broker/dealer and wealth management firm in Gig Harbor.

Zach started Bulwark Capital Management so that he could provide fee-based services and move away from securities transactions as a method of compensation. "I wanted to get into the fiduciary space of true partnership with my clients. I was already providing my best recommendations, and I wanted to formalize that and become a legal fiduciary. With a fee-based business model, our fates are tied—my success is based on achieving financial success for my clients," Zach says.

Bulwark's clients like the easy flow of communication they get from the firm, which is a point of pride and an ongoing objective. "We always try to be in reach," Zach says. But more than that, it's Bulwark's focus on doing better than the market that inspires. "I often say that if you're just going to 'ride out the market,' then why pay anyone to handle your money? Our firm's goal is to do a better job for you than you can do on your own," he says.

Mr. Abraham is a Washington native who holds a Bachelor of Science in Finance from Pacific Lutheran University, where he played football. He is also the host of "Know Your Risk Radio" which simulcasts on multiple platforms.

Zach stays busy with his wife and three young children and is a passionate golfer whenever he can find time to get on the course. He is involved with community charities, including a local youth homeless shelter.
